Trauma and Young Children

Young children exposed to trauma are at risk for significant cognitive, social, and emotional problems. Trauma can negatively affect children's brain development, readiness to learn, and family relationships.

CTI offers an evidence- and relationship-based model of treatment for children birth through 5 years old and their families. The model—Child-Parent Psychotherapy—was developed at the University of California / San Francisco General Hospital / Child Trauma Research Program by director Dr. Alicia Lieberman and faculty Dr. Patricia Van Horn. It incorporates developmental, attachment, and cultural approaches.

The CTI program addresses the Stress-Trauma continuum, its application to Child-Parent Psychotherapy, and specific strategies for interventions while working with families.

Program Components

- Once monthly didactic trainings with leaders in the field
- Twice monthly reflective facilitation groups for clinical supervisors, Child-Parent psychotherapists, mental health consultants, and distance learners
- Web-based distance learning option
- Supportive learning environment
- Readings to deepen understanding of Early Childhood Mental Health theory and practice

- Continuing education units for LMFTs and LCSWs: CTI is an MCEP-approved provider #JFS003. This training will be submitted to MCEP.
- California competencies for Infant-Family and Early Childhood Mental Health clinicians

Tuition and Fees

Subsidized tuition is $1,500 per year and is made possible by generous grants from the John and Lisa Pritzker Family Fund, the Ingrid D. Tauber Philanthropic Fund, other individual donations, fees, and corporate grants. These scholarships are available to encourage agency staff to enroll. For others, full tuition is $5,000 for each year of the program.

Build Your Agency's Capacity to Treat Trauma

CTI is offering a "Capacity-Building Option" in 2011 – 2012 to support the development of your agency's services in Child-Parent Psychotherapy.

Requirements

If you choose to take this option, the requirements are:

- Participation of at least one clinical supervisor and two clinicians from your agency in the nine-month training.
- Three 90-minute, capacity-building meetings with CTI faculty during the nine-month training. Executive and/or clinical directors are required to attend. These meetings are held via phone or video conference.

Discount Offered

By sending multiple professionals to the CTI trainings, your agency will expand its capacity to treat young children and their families. It will also save $300 per participant on the tuition fee of $1,500 for the CTI trainings. Your participants will pay $1,200 each for the full nine-month program plus the Capacity-Building Option.
